Reproductions and Copyright:

U.S. Copyright Law (Section 107) governs the making and use of most photocopies and other reproductions of copyrighted materials. Under situations specified in the law (referred to as “fair use”), libraries and archives may lawfully furnish a photocopy or other reproductions. One of these “fair use” situations is where the photocopy or reproduction is to be used only for “private study, scholarship, or research.” If a user later uses a photocopy or reproduction for purposes other than “private study, scholarship, or research,” then the “fair use” exception may not apply and that user may be liable for copyright infringement.

Most manuscript materials, sound recordings, photographs, and film created in the past 120 years are protected under copyright law. Transmission, reproduction, publication, or presentation of items generally requires the permission of copyright owners. The responsibility of obtaining permissions rests with the individual. The University of North Carolina at Greensboro assumes no responsibility. To learn more about U.S. Copyright Law, researchers should contact the U.S. Copyright Office (<http://www.loc.gov/copyright/>). This institution reserves the right to refuse a copying request if, in its judgment, fulfillment of the order would involve violation of copyright law.

I have read, understood, and by my signature below, agree to comply with U.S. Copyright. I assume all responsibility for my use of the material, and hold Martha Blakeney Hodges Special Collections and University Archives, The University of North Carolina at Greensboro and their employees, agents, and affiliates harmless from any liability for copyright infringement, defamation, invasion of privacy, or other violations of state or federal law.
